A Treatise on Guaranty Insurance Thomas Gold Frost,1902

Bond Insurers ,2008 As the risk of default for the underlying securities has risen, the value of the credit default swaps to insurers has fallen, resulting in multi-billion dollar paper losses for bond insurers. [...] The purpose of this insurance, therefore, is to credit enhance or raise the credit rating that would have been assigned based upon the financial strength of the original issuer to that of the insurance company guaranteeing the bond. [...] As long as the CDS contract is on the same terms as the traditional insurance policies, the switch to CDS contracting would not alter capital requirements for the financial guarantor wanting to maintain a very high credit rating. [...] Both AGFI11 and the individual bond insurer MBIA12 indicate that the vast majority of the CDS offered by bond insurers mirrored the guaranty of the traditional products - namely, prompt interest payments and ultimate return of principle under the original terms of the security. [...] Thus, if there is significant increase in a default risk that is being covered by a CDS, the market value of the CDS to the buyer would rise significantly, (the value to the seller would, of course, drop significantly) and this rise (or drop) would have to be reflected on the income statement.

Notes Accompanying Tabular Index 1. These bonds are deemed financial guarantees (section 231) and are commonly issued only in connection with collateral security (sec- tion 6). 2. These bonds are deemed financial guarantees (section 231) and are commonly written only in connection with collateral security (sec- tion 6) or otherwise only in behalf of exceptionally responsible princi- pals. 3. These bonds are deemed desirable business when issued in behalf of principals of good character. Joint control (sections 189-192) is frequently necessary or desirable. 4. These bonds are written freely, and upon an insurance basis (section 3) for the most part. 5. Most surety companies prefer not to write under any conditions certain classes of bonds, and they make up accordingly what they call their Prohibited List--a statement of these undesired and black- listed risks. Surety classifications are sometimes embodied in the lists, but the prohibition applies particularly to fidelity bonds, since almost any surety bond, however monstrous its condition, would be issuable for a responsible principal or with adequate collateral. There are some classes of fidelity bonds, however, with which it is hardly worth while to bother, because no premium that the traffic will bear would cover acquisition costs, losses, and claim expenses; that is, it is clear at the outset that the bonds cannot be prudently written without a thorough investigation, that a large proportion of rejections are in- evitable from the nature of the case, and that the paltry premium ob- tainable will by no means justify the necessary expenditure. Sewing- machine agents, book- canvassers, and commission salesmen in general are examples of these impracticable fidelity risks. The only...
