Richard L. Newman

Head-Up Displays: Designing the Way Ahead Richard L. Newman, 2017-03-02 This is a thorough description of this increasingly important technology, starting from the development of head-up displays (HUDs), particularly specifications and standards and operational problems associated with HUD use. HUD involvement in spatial disorientation and its use in recognizing and recovering from unusual attitudes is discussed. The book summarizes the design criteria including hardware, software, interface and display criteria. It goes on to outline flight tasks to be used for evaluating HUDs and discusses the impact of HUDs on flight training. Recent work indicates that a HUD may allow a significant reduction in the time required to train a pilot on a particular aircraft, even considering non-HUD-related tasks. The author concludes with a review of unresolved HUD issues and recommendations for further research and provides an impressive bibliography, glossary and index. Within the military aviation sector the book will be of use to industry, research agencies, test pilot schools and air force training establishments. In the civil area regulatory authorities, airlines and industry will also have an increasing interest.

Visual Optics of Head-up Displays (HUDs) in Automotive Applications Shigeru Okabayashi, 1996 This title examines head-up display technology (HUD) and its application in the automotive industry. With the recent trend toward higher-speed mobility, as typified by the plan in Japan to build a second Tomei expressway linking Tokyo, Nagoya and Osaka, there is a need for more complex and accurate navigation or route guidance systems. In addition, older drivers, whose vision may be declining, must be able to obtain the necessary information for safe vehicle operation. The author demonstrates that HUD, originally developed for weapons targeting in fighter planes, is ideal for meeting these future automotive navigational and social needs. As HUDs become a standard automotive feature this work will be an important reference to this rapidly developing technology.

Transport Category Airplane Head Up Display (HUD) Systems A-4 HUD Head-up Display Subcommittee, 2008 The material provided in this document consists of recommendations related to the design, analysis, testing, and intended functions of head up displays (HUDs) for transport category airplanes. The content of the document is limited to statements of general design and installation considerations, including display function criticality and compliance considerations; symbology, coding, clutter, dimensionality, and attention getting requirements; equipment installation; display visual characteristics; failure modes; information display and formatting; specific integrated display and mode; and system verification.

Human Factors Issues in Head-up Display Design Daniel J. Weintraub,1992

Head-up Displays for Automotive Applications A. Harrison,1994 This report reviews the literature on automotive head-up displays (HUDs) from a human-factors point of view. Four major topics are covered in this review: HUD display parameters, the designs of available HUDs, popular appraisals of HUDs, and human performance with HUDs. The most important display parameters are HUD location and HUD contrast with respect to the roadway. Several assessments of optimal HUD location have been made, and there is a consensus that HUDs should be located in the region where drivers make the majority of their eye fixations. Appropriate HUD image contrast levels with respect to the roadway have also been assessed, and it has been recommended that the HUD image be between 15 percent and 50 percent as bright as the background for daylight luminance conditions, and about 300 percent as bright as the background during nighttime luminance conditions. The second section of the review is dedicated to the description of HUD hardware and available HUD systems. It is evident that technology is available to produce a HUD that meets all of the display criteria discussed in the first section, with the exception of optimal HUD image contrast with the brightest backgrounds. Popular perceptions of automotive HUDs are discussed in the third section of the review. People believe that HUDs would be beneficial for performing the driving task, but will require more experience with HUDs before being comfortable with them in their automobiles. Human performance with automotive HUDs is discussed in the final section of this review. Most assessments have investigated the effects of displaying speedometer information head-up. It has been found that people can monitor and extract information from a HUD speedometer more rapidly and frequently than from a conventional speedometer, but that HUD speedometers do not affect speeding behavior. The most significant benefit of HUD speedometers is that they allow for quicker and more accurate reactions to roadway...

Minimum Performance Standard for Airborne Head Up Display (HUD) A-4HUD Head-up Display Subcommittee,2015 This SAE Aerospace Standard (AS) specifies minimum performance standards for airborne binocular Head-Up Displays (HUDs) in fixed wing (14 CFR part 23, 25) aircraft; while this document is also applicable to rotorcraft (14 CFR part 27, 29) additional performance standards may be required for rotorcraft. This aerospace standard covers basic display standards, but does not include specific application requirements. Specific applications can include flight instrumentation, navigation, engine and system status, alerting, surveillance, communication, terrain awareness, weather, enhanced vision, synthetic vision and other displays. This document covers criteria for conformal and non-conformal HUD systems that are intended for use in the flight deck by the pilot or copilot. Display minimum performance characteristics are specified for standard and other environmental conditions for the purpose of product qualification. This document does not address sensor imaging systems, displays worn by the pilot (goggles, helmet mounted displays) or specific symbology to be displayed. This document is intended to be used in combination with other guidance material contained in current system specific, Technical Standard Orders (TSOs), Advisory Circulars (ACs), and other Federal Aviation Administration (FAA)-approved guidance material. This SAE Aerospace Standard can be applicable to HUDs used across multiple aircraft types. This SAE Aerospace Standard provides the Minimum Performance Standard for Airborne Head-Up Display (HUD) for use by the aerospace industry and may also be used by the FAA and other regulatory agencies in a technical standard order. The original version focused on CRT-HUD technology and Revision A updates the CRT requirements and extends the requirements to cover digital HUDs. This document was developed by the SAE A-4 HUD subcommittee and supersedes AS8055.

Design and Construction of a Commercial Aftermarket Automotive Head-Up Display Donn Eric Pasiliao, 2014 The contents of this report provides a comprehensive look at the details involved in the design and development of an automotive head-up display (HUD). By examining the product's complete assembly, including its optics, mechanical assembly, and embedded system, a portable aftermarket automotive HUD was successfully constructed. The resulting product addresses issues and criticisms present in commercially available HUDs, such as display clutter, placement, price, and versatility, giving it a strong competitive advantage within its target market. A brief overview on some performance improvements is also included, followed by recommendations for future actions to advance the developed product closer to commercialization.

Optical Design of Head Up Display Goyal Megha, Lather Yashpal, 2015-06-23 Over last 50 years, there have been innumerable article and scientific papers which address the design and performance of Head mounted Display systems and Head up Display system. With the fielding of the various military and civilian system, research within this area has accelerated greatly since the mid of 1980's. This project intends to the design of Head up Display system. First we focus that what is HUD and its requirement in army and civilian aviation. HUD device including a display element arranged to be mounted in front of the user instantaneous field of view and display controlling unit disposed remotely from the display element and coupled thereto by a signal transmission apparatus.

for Head-Up Displays (HUDs) has been prepared to assist the HUD engineer by providing in one source a list of design criteria for HUDs. The criteria are based on a review of existing HUD specifications and HUD research. Contents: Definitions; System Characteristics; Operational System Criteria; Display Criteria; Symbology Criteria; Primary Flight Reference Criteria.

Head-Up Displays and Attention Capture National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA),2018-06 The primary role of head-up displays (HUDs) is to provide primary flight, navigation, and guidance information to the pilot in a forward field-of-view on a head-up transparent screen. Therefore, this theoretically allows for optimal control of an aircraft through the simultaneous scanning of both instrument data and the out-the-window scene. However, despite significant aviation safety benefits afforded by HUDs, a number of accidents have shown that their use does not come without costs. The human factors community has identified significant issues related to the pilot distribution of near and far domain attentional resources because of the compellingness of symbology elements on the HUD; a concern termed, attention or cognitive capture. The paper describes the phenomena of attention capture and presents a selected survey of the literature on the etiology and potential prescriptions. Improvement of Head-Up Display Standards. Volume 3. An Evaluation of Head-Up Display Safety Richard L. Newman, CREW SYSTEMS CONSULTANTS YELLOW SPRINGS OH.,1987 A review of the safety aspects of head-up displays (HUDs) is presented. Because of the widespread concern about the use of HUDs during unusual attitudes, particular attention was paid to spatial disorientation and the implications of flying by reference to the HUD during unusual attitude recoveries. It is concluded that the HUD is not inherently unsafe during instrument meteorological conditions and is quite suitable for use as a primary flight display. It is clear, however, that current military training for pilots in the use of the HUD is inadequate both in terms of initial pilot training and recurrent training. Any problem with head-up displays is exacerbated by the lack of adequate training. The use of a generic HUD procedures trainer is highly recommended. Keywords: Orientation(Direction), Symbols, Flight instruments, Flight control, Flight instrument standardization, Instrument flight training, Aviation safety. (EDC).
