

Le Calvaire De Daniella

Et si vous aviez le choix ? Mourir ou vous battre pour vivre... Je m'appelle Larson BIRKE, je vais avoir dix-huit ans et aujourd'hui, j'ai peut-être ce choix. Vous allez me dire que je dois me battre, mais en ai-je vraiment envie ? On le sait tous, la vie ne fait jamais de cadeaux et elle n'a pas été rose pour moi. Alors, si je dis stop, qui va me pleurer ? Mes parents ? Oui, sûrement, et ensuite ? Ai-je vraiment des amis ? Si vous lisez ceci, c'est que je suis sans doute déjà mort, ça veut dire aussi que j'ai osé, j'ai agi, j'ai parlé. On dit toujours que c'est seulement face à la mort qu'on sait si on veut vraiment mourir, on voit défiler notre vie et tout le blabla... Si je m'en sors, je vous le dirais. Pour la vie comme pour la mort, nous ne sommes pas grand-chose, on doit simplement trouver le juste milieu, vivre en pensant qu'on va tous mourir un jour et mourir en pensant qu'on a bien vécu. Ouais, retenez ça... Personnellement, j'ai des doutes sur ce point, bien vécu... En attendant, c'est ici que je vous explique mon geste, j'ai fait tellement de mauvais choix... Bref, vous êtes prêt ? Certains vont avoir du mal avec ce que je vais vous dire. Bienvenue dans ... MA FUCKING LIFE !

Sortilèges vénitiens, Carole Mortimer Lors d'un magnifique bal masqué donné à Venise, Dani tombe sous le charme d'un invité à la séduction irrésistible. Toute prudence oubliée, elle cède à la passion dans un moment d'ivresse, pour découvrir un plaisir qu'elle n'aurait jamais imaginé auparavant. Mais lorsque celui qui a réduit à néant toutes ses résistances et ses inhibitions ôte son masque, Dani découvre, effarée, que l'inconnu n'est autre que Niccolo D'Alessandro, un homme qui lui a toujours témoigné le plus profond mépris et pour lequel elle éprouve une antipathie sans bornes... + 1 ROMAN REEDITE OFFERT : L'honneur des Montoya, Anne Mather Cassandra reconnaît tout de suite le visiteur qui se tient devant elle. Comment aurait-elle pu oublier Enrique Montoya, cet homme plein d'arrogance qui l'a odieusement trahie quelques années auparavant.

Sung Hwan Kim's art is an ongoing experiment with narration, of which he writes: "I thought of a room as a box from which a story vibrates, and I began to think about the constant occupants of rooms. In the room focused on captives (the tortured): an actress on stand-by for her secret lover, a dog, a radio host, a traveler in a city and so forth—all as the room occupants (and vibrators of the hidden boxes). I knew that, in a breeding season, male humpback whales of one population sing the same song, but that each time this song is sung, it varies through imitation and improvisation. I thought of both performances, and the stories told within them, as versions of variations. Plain phenomena are not more exciting than they are, but they are often recounted as otherwise through exaggeration, deletion, intonation and rhythm, texture of voice and the usage of time-emerging as fairy tales, myths, magic, lies, propaganda, history, or sometimes fact. Most of the songs from In the room will be published separately as album by dogr called In Korean Wilds and Villages. In this form, I recognize that the authorship of these stories is conferred to another medium, another language, another culture, and another man."

Adrian Rollini (1903–1956), an American jazz multi-instrumentalist, played the bass saxophone, piano, vibraphone, and an array of other instruments. He even introduced some, such as the harmonica-like cuesnophone, called Goofus, never before wielded in jazz. Adrian Rollini: The Life and Music of a Jazz Rambler draws on oral history, countless vintage articles, and family archives to trace Rollini's life, from his family's arrival in the US to his development and career as a musician and to his retirement and death. A child prodigy, Rollini was playing the piano in public at the age of five. At sixteen in New York he was recording pianola rolls when his peers recognized his talent and asked him to play xylophone and piano in a new band, the California Ramblers. When he decided to play a relatively new instrument, the bass saxophone, the Ramblers made their mark on jazz forever. Rollini became the man who gave this instrument its place. Yet he did not limit himself to playing bass parts—he became the California Ramblers' major soloist and created the studio and public sound of the band. In 1927 Rollini led a new band that included such jazz greats as Bix Beiderbecke and Frank Trumbauer. During the Depression years, he was back in New York playing with several bands including his own New California Ramblers. In the 1940s, Rollini purchased a property on Key Largo. He rarely performed again for the public but hosted rollicking jam sessions at his fishing lodge with some of the best nationally known and local players. After a car wreck and an unfortunate hospitalization, Rollini passed away at age fifty-three.

This volume offers a pioneering study of slavery in the Italian states. Documenting previously unstudied cases of slavery in six Italian cities—Naples, Caserta, Rome, Palermo, Livorno and Genoa—Giulia Bonazza investigates why slavery survived into the middle of the nineteenth century, even as the abolitionist debate raged internationally and most states had abolished it. She contextualizes these cases of residual slavery from 1750–1850, focusing on two juridical and political watersheds: after the Napoleonic period, when the Italian states (with the exception of the Papal States) adopted constitutions outlawing slavery; and after the Congress of Vienna, when diplomatic relations between the Italian states, France and Great Britain intensified and slavery was condemned in terms that covered only the Atlantic slave trade. By excavating the lives of men and women who remained in slavery after abolition, this book sheds new light on the broader Mediterranean and transatlantic dimensions of slavery in the Italian states.

For as long as anyone can remember, a man named Luca Turin has had an uncanny relationship with smells. He has been compared to the hero of Patrick Süskind's novel Perfume, but his story is in fact stranger, because it is true. It concerns how he made use of his powerful gifts to solve one of the last great mysteries of the human body: how our noses work. Luca Turin can distinguish the components of just about any smell, from the world's most refined perfumes to the air in a subway car on the Paris metro. A distinguished scientist, he once worked in an unrelated field, though he made a hobby of collecting fragrances. But when, as a lark, he published a collection of his reviews of the world's perfumes, the book hit the small, insular business of perfume makers like a thunderclap. Who is this man Luca Turin, they demanded, and how does he know so much? The closed community of scent creation opened up to Luca Turin, and he discovered a fact that astonished him: no one in this world knew how smell worked. Billions and billions of dollars were spent creating scents in a manner amounting to glorified trial and error. The solution to the mystery of every other human sense has led to the Nobel Prize, if not vast riches. Why, Luca Turin thought, should smell be any different? So he gave his life to this great puzzle. And in the end, incredibly, it would seem that he solved it. But when enormously powerful interests are threatened and great reputations are at stake, Luca Turin learned, nothing is quite what it seems. Acclaimed writer Chandler Burr has spent four years chronicling Luca Turin's quest to unravel the mystery of how our sense of smell works. What has emerged is an enthralling, magical book that changes the way we think about that area between our mouth and our eyes, and its profound, secret hold on our lives.

Representations of convents and nuns assumed power and urgency within the volatile political culture of eighteenth-century France. Drawing from a range of literary, cultural, and legal material, Mita Choudhury analyzes how, between 1730 and 1789, lawyers, religious pamphleteers, and men of letters repeatedly asked, "Who should control the female convent and women religious?" These sources chronicled the conflicts between nuns and the male clergy, among nuns themselves, and between nuns and their families, conflicts that were presented to the public in the context of potent issues such as despotism, citizenship, female education, and sexuality. The cloister operated as a symbol of despotism, the equivalent of the Sultan's seraglio or the King's Bastille. Before 1770, lawyers and magistrates praised nuns as the personification of virtuous Christian women, often victims vulnerable to those who would use them to further their own political ends. After 1770, men of letters evaluated nuns according to more secular norms, and concluded that the convent had no purpose in society, except as a reminder of the problems inherent in the Old Regime. Choudhury elaborates on how nuns were not always passive entities, mere objects to be shaped by the political needs of others. But because they relied on men in order to make their voices heard, the place of women religious in the public sphere was a complex one based on negotiations between female action and male subjectivity. During the French Revolution, whatever support they had enjoyed was lost as republicans and moderates began to see nuns as potentially disruptive to the social order, family life, and revolutionary values.

Alors que Daniella a une vie paisible et sans histoire, la direction de son entreprise change. Et c'est le terrible Gidéon Diaz qui devient son nouveau patron. Gidéon Diaz a la réputation d'être un requin dans le monde des affaires, mais si, en réalité, il était bien pire que cela? A l'instant où il pose les yeux sur Daniella, le sort de la jeune femme est scellé. Elle ne le sait pas encore, mais sa vie vient de basculer... .. seulement, parfois, des ténèbres jaillit la lumière... DARK ROMANCE Avertissement: Ce livre est une Dark Romance, certaines scènes pouvant heurter les âmes sensibles (scènes de viol), pour public Averti.

T. J. Clark's classic work of art history refuses to separate art from its social and political context in revolutionary France.

A sweeping story of survival during World War II Amsterdam, May 1943. As the tulips bloom and the Nazis tighten their grip across the city, the last signs of Dutch resistance are being swept away. Marijke de Graaf and her husband are arrested and deported to different concentration camps in Germany. Marijke is given a terrible choice: to suffer a slow death in the labor camp or—for a chance at survival—to join the camp brothel. On the other side of the barbed wire, SS officer Karl Mÿller arrives at the camp hoping to live up to his father's expectations of wartime glory. When he encounters the newly arrived Marijke, this meeting changes their lives forever. Woven into the narrative across space and time is Luciano Wagner's ordeal in 1977 Buenos Aires, during the heat of the Argentine Dirty War. In his struggle to endure military captivity, he searches for ways to resist from a prison cell he may never leave. From the Netherlands to Germany to Argentina, The Dutch Wife braids together the stories of three individuals who share a dark secret and are entangled in two of the most oppressive reigns of terror in modern history. This is a novel about the blurred lines between love and lust, abuse and resistance, and right and wrong, as well as the capacity for ordinary people to persevere and do the unthinkable in extraordinary circumstances.

George Sand's The Seven Strings of the Lyre is a philosophical play written in poetic prose and never intended for performance on stage. Completed in 1838 during the early stages of Sand's romantic involvement with Frederic Chopin, it is one of the very few treatments of the Faust legend by a woman. George Kennedy offers the first English translation of this work, along with an introduction that places the play in its philosophical and literary context. The Seven Strings of the Lyre is Sand's response to Goethe's Faust and a reflection of her views of music as developed in conversations with Chopin and Franz Liszt. Sand, unlike so many of her contemporaries, saw Goethe as a less-than-ideal poet. She criticized him for lacking "enthusiasm, belief, and passion," and she faulted him for being a proponent of the art-for-art's-sake movement, which Sand deplored for its lack of social conscience. Sand's play describes the efforts of Mephistopheles to win the soul of Albertus, a teacher of philosophy and descendant of Faust. Regarding Goethe's Mephistopheles as insufficiently wicked, Sand conjures up a devil truly worthy of the epithet. For Faust, whom she considered too cold, Sand substitutes the more emotional Albertus, whose despair that life and love have passed him by in his devotion to philosophy makes him vulnerable to the machinations of the devil. And in place of Goethe's village girl, Marguerite, or the dangerous Helen of the earlier Faust legend, Sand creates the angelic Helen, who awakens Albertus's love and teaches him the emotional and spiritual truths he had never learned from books. Richly philosophical and deeply romantic, the play is a reaction against eighteenth-century rationalism. It asserts the existence of some higher truth to be found in music, poetry, and a sympathetic response to nature, but it also, contrary to the doctrine of art for art's sake, demands social responsibility from the artist. Sand believed that the arts should lead society to an awareness of truth, freedom, and the meaning of life, and The Seven Strings of the Lyre is an attempt to dramatize this belief.
