Over the past two months, four men have been murdered in their Houston, Texas homes. Each victim was killed on a Sunday evening, and in each case nothing apparently was stolen, and inexplicably, different guns were used in the four murders. The police have no witnesses and no suspects. Rhett Sanders, owner of a local marketing research firm, is visited by the parents of the latest victim who plead with him to investigate their son's murder. Their son participated in a recent survey conducted by Rhett's firm, and they had read the publicity Rhett had received for using his research to solve murders in the past. Rhett had promised to give up being an amateur detective, but the despair in the faces of the grieving parents, along with his desire to do the right thing, motivate him to get involved. He and his girlfriend, Toni, and best friend, Chris Beck, undertake an investigation, believing they can solve the case if they can discover what else the victims had in common other than the way they were murdered.

Is there an afterlife? What happens when we die? How do we reach the other side? What is heaven like, according to comatose children who have regained consciousness? What do Quantum and Reincarnation theories share? Is organ transplantation the physical replacement of organs or is there more to it than that? What are soulmates? These and other questions are explored by Dr Carmen Gleadow against an academic background of religious, medical and philosophical research.

In November 1977, The New Yorker published a feature-length biography of artist Romare Bearden by Calvin Tomkins as part of its "Profiles" series. The essay, titled Profile: Putting Something Over Something Else (using Bearden's words to describe the creative process), brought national focus to Bearden, whose rise had seemed meteoric since the late 1960s. The experience of the interview prompted Bearden to launch an autobiographical collection he called Profiles. He sequenced the project in two parts: Part I, The Twenties, featuring memories from his youth in the South and in Pittsburgh, and Part II, The Thirties, about his early adult life in New York. Bearden collaborated with friend and writer Albert Murray on a short statement to accompany each piece. These appeared scripted onto the walls of the Profile exhibition to lead viewers on a visual and poetic journey. This landmark volume, reassembles and reconsiders Bearden's Profile series. Beyond providing the opportunity to explore an understudied body of work, the project will investigate the roles of narrative and self-presentation for an artist who made a career of creating works based on memory and experience. It will also reveal Bearden's own gestures away from the autobiographical and toward a broader view.

A manifesto for a radically different philosophy and practice of manufacture and environmentalism "Reduce, reuse, recycle" urge environmentalists; in other words, do more with less in order to minimize damage. But as this provocative, visionary book argues, this approach perpetuates a one-way, "cradle to grave" manufacturing model that dates to the Industrial Revolution and casts off as much as 90 percent of the materials it uses as waste, much of it toxic. Why not challenge the notion that human industry must inevitably damage the natural world? In fact, why not take nature itself as our model? A tree produces thousands of blossoms in order to create another tree, yet we do not consider its abundance wasteful but safe, beautiful, and highly effective; hence, "waste equals food" is the first principle the book sets forth. Products might be designed so that, after their useful life, they provide nourishment for something new-either as "biological nutrients" that safely re-enter the environment or as "technical nutrients" that circulate within closed-loop industrial cycles, without being "downcycled" into low-grade uses (as most "recyclables" now are). In the right now of right now-in the tunnel vision of now-, I now know that this wavering of self forever allows me to wholly believe in whatever I believe while also forever keeping me in between it all-while forever keeping me a neutral and balanced-out party.In short, to have faith is to have faith in oneself. In essence, I believe all that I have written in this book, for I have indeed believed it at some point and it has indeed culminated into this very reflection. From the present moment that is no longer the moments of before, it appears that my beliefs have changed, but I also feel that they are and were as permanent as ever-that they are and were this motionless still that makes me feel as if I am forever being swept elsewhere as I go from moment to moment. It is in duality that we can have it all, and it is also in duality that we can have this blindness that is an all beyond it all. Combined, well, we cannot help but have it all, despite forever feeling as if we are being torn between it all. As I look back on my most recent lifestyle changes that appear to be so instantaneous, well, I cannot help but re-remember that there is some good to be found in all that is bad, just as there is some bad to be found in all that is good. It is in thinking that no bad can come from something good and that no good can come from something bad, that I inevitably switch sides and become that which I could never become. It is in thinking that I am in pursuit of perfection despite always finding imperfection, that I inevitably exist in perfection. I lose in that I cannot win, but I also win in that I cannot lose, despite forever feeling as if I am winning and losing from moment to moment. I do believe myself to be the second coming of Jesus, but I also believe that I am you and you are me and that together and apart we are everything and everyone in each and every moment-in just one moment. I am special, but only because I am blind. I am blind, but only because you all make me feel as if I am special. As of right now, my obvious cannot be yours-despite it somehow being just that forever and always-and I pride myself in knowing that this obvious will not always be my obvious and that it will inevitably be just yours as well. I know that I cannot help but be a friend to my obvious and an enemy to your obvious. I know that I cannot help but be an enemy to the obvious that feels previous and a friend to the obvious that is no longer distant. No matter what I do-no matter what I believe-, I know that I cannot help but do it or believe it, as evidenced by the reality that I cannot help but do it and believe it. When we look at each other, we can never see what the other sees, for we can only see for ourselves. These words of mine are as much of a forcing of perspective as I wish them not to be-as much as I plead you to not see them as such. You will find yourself agreeing with the beliefs that are no longer my beliefs, just as I will find myself agreeing with some beliefs that are no longer your beliefs. In seeing this, it is my hope that you can just let your friends be your enemies and your enemies be your friends, and therefore something else altogether-but it is in such reflection, that I do indeed know that we are indeed this 'something else altogether'. In fighting for yourself, you cannot help but fight for everyone, and in fighting for everyone, you cannot help but fight not for yourself. Without such conflict, we would never grow to know each other as we know ourselves or know ourselves as others know themselves, even if this is just the greatest blindness of all-even if this is just the illusion of free will and individuality-even if we are just trapped in an infinitely fine-tuned chain reaction of seemingly endless events. I know that when I see the color blue, that you see something so different, and not a blue when it comes to the blue I see. Further though, I know how deceiving this similarity is, for even I cannot...

Dick Higgins and his Something Else Press epitomized the riotous art of the '60s There are few art-world figures as influential--and as little known--as Dick Higgins (1938-98), cofounder of Fluxus, "polyartist," poet, scholar, theorist, composer, performer and, not least, the publisher of the legendary Something Else Press. In 1965 he restored the term "intermedia" to the English language, giving it new dimension to recognize the dissolution of boundaries between traditional modes of art-making and the open field for new forms that cannot be compartmentalized. His own contributions to intermedia are many--as a participant and instigator of happenings, as writer and composer straddling traditional and vanguard forms, among others--but it was Something Else Press (1963-74) that redefined how "the book" could inhabit that energized, in-between space. Something Else Press was as much a critical statement and radical experiment as it was a collection of books by some of the most luminary artists and writers of the 20th century: Gertrude Stein, John Cage, Ray Johnson, Dieter Roth, Bern Porter, Ian Hamilton Finlay, Emmett Williams, Robert Filliou, and George Brecht, among many others. Along with his Great Bear Pamphlet series and the Something Else newsletter, Higgins exploited and subverted conventional book production and marketing strategies to get unconventional and avant-garde works into the hands of new and often unsuspecting readers. Edited by Granary Books publisher Steve Clay and Fluxus artist Ken Friedman, this judiciously curated and indispensable compendium of essays, theoretical writings and narrative prose dives deep into the ever-influential ideas that Higgins explored in theory and practice. Clay and Friedman have chosen works that illuminate Higgins' voracious intellectual appetite, encyclopedic body of knowledge and playful yet rigorous experimentation in a selection that includes many writings long out of print or difficult to find.

This book of poetry and musings is a passionate reminder of the beauty and pain that we face in life. It also reminds us that we must keep our faith in our destiny as we embrace love, family, and the simplest of tasks that we forget along the way. This book of poetry will give the reader food for the soul and comfort in knowing that we are not alone as we move toward our destiny. Virtually every scholar on both sides of the same-sex discussion eventually addresses the account of Sodom found in Genesis 19. However, in recent years, scholars have tended to downplay the importance of this chapter in relation to this debate. This book challenges this trend and seeks to demonstrate how the account of Sodom plays a key role in our understanding of a God-ordained sexual ethic, especially in light of Genesis as Torah--instruction for both ancient Israel and for the Church.

memoir as it seeks to explore key aspects of identity: the Italia, the Irish, and the Queer. This passionate and provocative collection spans 30 years and is a selection of new, unpublished, and previously published poems from the author's acclaimed 2009 chapbook, Supplications. The poet is a stor-teller, no doubt, with an impeccable ability to weave lyrical recollections with bold -and at times- cutting images. The book is divided into three sections -Irish, Italian, and Queer but memory is the connective tissue through this sprawling collection that reveals much about our human need for story-telling and self-reflection as much as our burning desire spiritually, intellectually, sexually, and emotionally for connection. D'Alessandro pays tribute to a variety of influences and forces in his life and poets he admires: "There Is Time Here" is a stirring nod to Jamaal May's "There Are Birds Here"; "Out Of Place" shares the title of the novel by Italian American and D'Alessandro's mento Joseph Papaleo; "The Sandbox, after the classic Edward Albee play -another of the D'Alessandro's mentors, is an ode to a dying parent; and the powerful "Mind Yerself" which is offered in thanks to the late Ciaran Carson and tells a woman's immigrant story while informing the reader that Mind Yerself is Irish for "I love you." Finally, the shortest poem in the collection. "Seeing Her Smile, Sometimes Never" gives a colorful nod to E. E. Cummings. As scholar and author, Pamela Rader wrote: "Franco D'Alessandro's poetry, instead of fracturing and alienating, unites and gathers both the personal and the collective human experiences as unique but shared experiences of love, friendship, passion, and loss. In the immediacy of its expression, D'Alessandro's poetry articulates both the palpable urgency to live and the pensive potency to reflect on the past and on what has been... (He) seeks a correspondence, similar to that of French Symbolist poet Charles Baudelaire, between the earthly realm of human experiences to the interpretive realms of language." Italian-based, Irish writer/journalist Hugo McCafferty writes: "Franco D'Alessandro's poetry is the silver thread that weaves together the major events, places, people and themes of his life. His work has a sense of time and place, that the past is present within us and around us, through the deeply held memory of a mother's touch or the unending admiration of a father's square shoulders, we become that which we love. Ireland, Italy, and love are the themes that form the pillars of this work, the pantheon of a life lived with the passion of an Italian, the recklessness of an Irishman and the sensitivity of an artist. There is tenderness here despite having weathered the winter of life's harshness, there is not a hint of cynicism, but instead quiet ebullience that is a gift of hope to us all. To read and feel the poems in 'Everything is Something Else' is to walk the cobblestoned streets of Rome, or Galway or the sun-baked sidewalks of New York with him and to know that you too are home."

around the world. Its influence reaches across the spectrum of alternative music, from psychedelia, prog, and punk, through industrial, electronica, and stoner rock. Hawkwind has been variously, if erroneously, positioned as the heir to both Pink Floyd and the Velvet Underground, and as Britain's answer to the Grateful Dead and Krautrock. It has defined a genre—space rock—while operating on a frequency that's uniquely its own. Hawkwind offered a form of radical escapism and an alternative account of a strange new world for a generation of young people growing up on a planet that seemed to be teetering on the brink of destruction, under threat from economic meltdown, industrial unrest, and political polarization. While other commentators confidently asserted that the countercultural experiment of the 1960s was over, Hawkwind took the underground to the provinces and beyond. In Days of the Underground, Joe Banks repositions Hawkwind as one of the most innovative and culturally significant bands of the 1970s. It's not an easy task. As with many bands of this era, a lazy narrative has built up around Hawkwind that doesn't do justice to the breadth of its ambition and achievements. Banks gives the lie to the popular perception of Hawkwind as one long lysergic soap opera; with Days of the Underground, he shows us just how revolutionary Hawkwind was.

From FSGO x Logic: a Stanford professor's spirited dismantling of Silicon Valley's intellectual origins Adrian Daub's What Tech Calls Thinking is a lively dismantling of the ideas that form the intellectual bedrock of Silicon Valley. Equally important to Silicon Valley's world-altering innovation are the language and ideas it uses to explain and justify itself. And often, those fancy new ideas are simply old motifs playing dress-up in a hoodie. From the myth of dropping out to the war cry of "disruption," Daub locates the Valley's supposedly original, radical thinking in the ideas of Heidegger and Ayn Rand, the New Age Esalen Foundation in Big Sur, and American traditions from the tent revival to predestination. Written with verve and imagination, What Tech Calls Thinking is an intellectual refutation of Silicon Valley's ethos, pulling back the curtain on the self-aggrandizing myths the Valley tells about itself. FSG Originals x Logic dissects the way technology functions in everyday lives. Many churches and leaders are already setting the pace. They are establishing new gatherings in old buildings and using new building to do old things. They are emphasizing diversity, welcome, and friendship. If these stories are hidden from view, they shouldn't be. These pages will uncover how new expressions get started, how they are led, how they struggle, and how they are sustained. Do Something Else will encourage candidates for ministry who
